US Treasury Dept. Pushed Banks to Sanction Conservative Groups

In the final days of the Trump administration, the US Treasury Dept. circulated a letter to major US financial institutions suggesting that mainstream social conservative organizations should be cut off from payment services in the name of stopping “hate”, according to a new report.

The Daily Signal reports that on January 15, 2021, citing the January 6, 2021, Capitol breach that broke out following former President Donald Trump's protest of Congress certifying the controversial 2020 election, Treasury's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FCEN) sent an email to the heads of Western Union, KeyBank, Wells Fargo, Citibank, JP Morgan Chase, Bank of America, Mitsubishi UFJ Financial Group, and other major US banks with the subject line “Capitol Riots”.

The email approvingly share a report put out by the left-wing non-profits Institute for Strategic Dialogue (ISD) and Global Disinformation Index (GDI), entitled “Bankrolling Bigotry: An Overview of the Online Funding Strategies of American Hate Groups.” The report identifies as “hate groups” a number of organizations which were neither involved in January 6 nor have ever advocated hatred or violence, including religious liberty firms Alliance Defending Freedom and Liberty Counsel, natural marriage and biological reality defense group Ruth Institute, the socially conservative Family Research Council, and the pro-life, pro-family American College of Pediatricians.

These organizations, which advocate for Christian values and mainstream conservative political positions were listed alongside the likes of white supremacist and Holocaust denial organizations. The report says that financial service platforms “should adopt policies which limit their use by “hate groups” and calls on Congress to make organizations it deems “hate groups” ineligible for tax-exempt status.

Yet the FCEN email, which was first revealed this month through the US House's Select Subcommittee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government, describes the report simply as “an overview on the funding of American hate groups’, alongside a variety of resources useful for “matters related to racially and ethnically motivated violent extremism, (REMVE) which may have application to the capitol riots and related activity.”....

Over the past several years, there have been numerous instances of banks, credit card companies, and crowdfunding platforms cutting off services to individuals and groups, thanks in large part, to the influence of groups like the Southern Poverty Law Center and the Anti-Defamation League and corporate trends such as environmental, societal, governance scoring.

The Biden administration's interest in centralized digital currency has further intensified fears of a future in which Americans' basic economic freedoms are tied to conformity with the views of those in power.
